

Washington, DC – Today, Congressman Bruce Braley (IA-01), Chair of the Populist Caucus, released the following statement on the FAA reauthorization coming to the House floor later this week:

“Once again, Congress will consider a vote this week that could weaken the middle class. Multi-national corporations already hold all of the cards in our economy; the government shouldn’t stack the deck against middle class families any further. As Chairman of the Populist Caucus, I’m strongly opposed to any efforts that will make union elections unfair.

All over the country, we’ve seen an attack on working families and the right of workers to make their voices heard. Hiding this union-busting provision in the FAA Reauthorization is unacceptable and hurts hardworking middle class Americans.”
